Dear David:

The difference between a well built home and an extremely well built home is the attention to detail. My new home is evidence of that kind of workmanship which is so lacking and rare these days. HJH General Contractors do an outstanding job and go well beyond normal expectations to satisfy their clients.

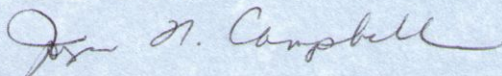

Many contractors utilize good quality materials - i.e. silent joist system, glued and screwed drywall, upgraded padding for the carpeting, Kohler fixtures, etc. However, it is rare to find two young men as committed and dedicated to making things right and making people happy as Lex Heinold and John Johansson. They are on the job site everyday - not just overseeing but actually being actively involved in the process of creating a home.

My husband, having first-hand supervisory experience of over 30 years in construction, was extremely demanding. The more he expected, the better Lex and John rose to the challenge. They were always gracious, extremely polite and never abrasive or caustic.

There is no way I can express my delight in my new home. It far exceeds my expectations. Seeing is believing - one has to see my home to appreciate the superior quality workmanship that is evident everywhere one looks.

Thank you for being affiliated with such fine contractors as HJH. Within a short period of time, HJH will set a standard that no other contractor - large or small will be able to match in this state.

Sincerely,

Joyce W. Campbell
